Capacity outside the Court of Protection

Introduction

Welcome to the April 2016 Newsletters. Highlights this month include:

(1) In the Health, Welfare and Deprivation of Liberty Newsletter: Charles J and the DOL impasse, sex and marriage, grappling with anorexia, and wishes and feelings in different contexts;

(2) In the Property and Affairs Newsletter: revoking and suspending LPAs, Law Society guidance on fiduciary duties and the OPG on delegation;

(3) In the Practice and Procedure Newsletter: Court of Protection statistics, the appointment of the Chief Assessor for the Law Society Mental Capacity accreditation scheme, statutory charges, contempt of court, and the admissibility of expert evidence;

(4) In the Capacity outside the COP Newsletter: follow-up from the Mental Capacity Action Day, obstructive family members and safeguarding, and end of life care and capacity;

(5) In the Scotland Newsletter: capacity, facility and circumvention, the new Edinburgh Sheriff Court Practice Note, an important case on the ability to apply for appointment as a guardian, and key responses to the Scottish Government consultation on incapacity law.

And remember, you can now find all our past issues, our case summaries, and much more on our dedicated sub-site here. ‘One-pagers’ of the cases in these Newsletters of most relevance to social work professionals will also shortly appear on the SCIE website.
National Mental Capacity Action Day

The newsletter editors were represented at the Action Day, at which many examples of innovative and effective methods of implementing the MCA were highlighted. In her address to the delegates (see also this Community Care article, the Chief Social Worker for Children noted that the MCA was valuable in children’s services, in particular in relation to the involvement of people in decisions that concern them, and the need to avoid being unnecessarily risk averse. The Chief Social Worker for Adults was clear that the MCA was a core aspect of social work which every social work student needed to be fully trained in. The editors were interested to learn that at least one local authority now routinely trains all adult social workers as best interests assessors.

Updated Care Act Guidance published

The Statutory guidance to support local authorities implement the Care Act 2014 was updated on 24 March 2016. The guidance is now available online in a format that defies easy downloading, but a “hacked” composite version can be found here.

A helpful table identifying the amendments and additions can be found here, and Luke Clements has updated his invaluable briefing here. Many of the amendments are minor, but the chapters on safeguarding and ordinary residence have been more substantially revised and amended to reflect developments in caselaw and practical experience. The focus on safeguarding is perhaps unsurprising in light of the recent publication of figures from the Local Government Association showing that there has been a large increase in safeguarding referrals since the coming into force of s.42 of the Care Act (see also in this regard the recent and troubling Times investigation in conjunction with Action on Elder Abuse as regards the increase in financial abuse). We note with a degree of concern that “clarification” has been added to chapter 14 on safeguarding to “to reinforce that, ordinarily, an enquiry under Section 42 of the Act is not appropriate where people are failing to care for themselves. Section 42 is primarily aimed at those suffering abuse or neglect from a third party.” We cannot help but feel that self-neglect is likely to fall back into the “too difficult” category as a result of this step.

Call for guidance on dealing with obstructive family members

In 2014 Newcastle Safeguarding Adults Board published a case review arising from the death of an elderly man whose son was subsequently convicted of wilful neglect under the MCA 2005, which has only just hit the headlines. The man himself had a history of non-engagement with medical services, and was supported in this by his son. When concerns about the man’s capacity arose, the local authority made an application to the Court of Protection, but sadly the man died before any substantive progress was made with the application, which was strongly resisted by the man’s son. The case review concludes that an earlier application to the Court of Protection would have made a difference, and recommends improved MCA training and awareness. While that is no doubt to be supported, the case review contains the following paragraph, which the editors respectfully suggest contains the entirely incorrect assertion that it can never be in P’s best interests for an unwise decision to be taken:

It has been questioned whether a successful and/or quicker application to the Court of Protection would have made any difference to the safeguarding of Adult D, given his previous lack of engagement with services. In determining Adult D’s best interests the Court of Protection would have been required to consider his previous behaviour and his current wishes and feelings amongst a number of other factors; however these would not have significantly influenced the outcome as the Mental Capacity Act does not allow any decision-maker, including the Court, to make an unwise decision as being in the best interests of an incapacitated person. Given the unique circumstances of this case the factor of magnetic importance for the Court would have been ensuring Health and Adult Social Care were given access to Adult D in his own home for the purposes of assessment and care provision.

This extract from the case review highlights the tension between the MCA as a method of protection, and as a way of empowering people who lack capacity to make their own decisions but wish their preferences to be respected. The editors suggest that while written guidance as to managing obstructive family members may be useful, addressing the wider issue of the interface between the MCA and safeguarding responsibilities is something which may be more helpful.

BMA report on end of life care and physician-assisted dying

The third part of the BMA’s report on end of life care and physician-assisted dying was published in March. The report contains the ‘reflections and recommendations’ of the BMA’s enquiry. The following key points of direct relevance to MCA practitioners arose:

- Current training on mental capacity does not always address all of the complexities involved in assessing decision-specific capacity in patients.
- Training should look to emphasise specific issues associated with mental capacity which are particularly applicable to the end of life – such as fluctuating capacity, patients with cognitive impairments, and recognising that capacity must be assessed for specific decisions.
- Doctors should understand how to best maximise decision-making capabilities.

The Equality Act 2010 received the Royal Assent on 8 April 2010. The Act brought together a number of statutes relating to discrimination into one statute. Most of the main provisions of the Act were brought into force by 1 October 2010 while other provisions relating to the Public Sector Equality duty of care come into force on 5 April 2011. A number of provisions of the Act however have still not been brought into force 6 years later.

A Committee was appointed in June last year under the chairmanship of Baroness Deech to conduct post legislative scrutiny of the disability provisions of the Act. During the course of the enquiry the Committee hear evidence from a range of people and organisations. The report of the committee was published on 24 March 2016. It made dismal reading.

Commenting on the report, the Chair of the Commission, Baroness Deech, said:
Over the course of our inquiry we have been struck by how disabled people are let down across the whole spectrum of life.

Access to public buildings remains an unnecessary challenge to disabled people. Public authorities can easily side-step their legal obligations to disabled people, and recent changes in the courts have led to disabled people finding it harder to fight discrimination.

When it comes to the law requiring reasonable adjustments to prevent discrimination, we found that there are problems in almost every part of society, from disabled toilets in restaurants being used for storage, to schools refusing interpreters for deaf parents, to reasonable adjustments simply not being made.

In the field of transport alone, we heard of an urgent need to meet disabled people’s requirements – whether it’s training for staff or implementing improvements to trains and buses - and we’re calling for all new rail infrastructure to incorporate step-free access in its design from the outset.

The Government bears the ultimate responsibility for enabling disabled people to participate in society on equal terms, and we believe it is simply not discharging that responsibility. Not only has the Government dragged its heels in bringing long-standing provisions of the Act into force, such as those requiring taxi drivers to take passengers in wheelchairs, but has in fact repealed some provisions which had protected disabled people. Intended to reduce the regulatory burden on business, the reality has been an increase in the burden on disabled people.

The Committee would like to see changes right at the top of Government and is calling for the Minister for Disabled People to be given a place on the Cabinet’s Social Justice Committee.

It’s time to reverse the attitude that disabled people are an afterthought. Many of the changes we suggest are simple and do not require legislation. We hope the Government will implement them quickly.

The report reached a number of conclusions and made a number of detailed recommendations. Although it concluded that combining disabilities with the other protected characteristics in one act did not in practice benefit disabled people, it also found that separating them out would be impractical. The committee preferred to concentrate on improvements to the Equality Act 2010 which would increase the protection of disabled people.

Of particular interest was the discussion of the role of the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. The Committee was at pains to clarify the position and status of the CRPD in light of “confusion” manifested by some who gave evidence to it, and in light of submissions that the Convention should be incorporated into English law. The Committee noted that:

Incorporation of the Convention is a step of a wholly different order from implementation, and would result in every provision of the Convention becoming a provision of English law, justiciable and enforceable in the courts of this country. A recommendation by the Committee that the Convention should be incorporated into United Kingdom law would certainly, as the Law Society said, “give an important signal about government commitment to equalities legislation”. But the Government, in its evidence to the inquiry by the Joint Committee on Human Rights into the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC), has argued that incorporation is unnecessary.

Rather, the Committee noted that there was an alternative, namely to give an equivalent commitment to that given by the Government in relation to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (which, as with the UNCRPD, is ratified, but not incorporated) to “give due consideration to the UNCRC articles when making new policy and legislation. In doing so, we will always consider the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child’s recommendations but recognise that, like other state signatories, the UK Government and the UN committee may at times disagree on what compliance with certain articles entails.”

The Committee noted that the Government had given no equivalent commitment in relation to the CRPD, and recommended that it do so. Such would “would be a recognition by the Government of its obligation ‘to take sufficient steps, including legislative steps, to realise the rights enshrined in the Convention.’ We agree with the [Joint Committee on Human Rights] that this would also render the debate about incorporation an irrelevance.”

The reported noted with regret the decision of the Government in 2015 to downgrade the role of the Minister for Disabled People from Minister of State to under Secretary of State, commenting that “it seemed to suggest to the disability movement that disability issues were less important.” The report made various suggestions to make the role more effective.

The report made a number of specific recommendations, of which we pick out solely that relating to the law and enforcement. The Committee concluded that developments in recent years have made fighting discrimination more difficult for disabled people. New tribunal fees, less access to legal aid, and procedural changes have combined to create barriers to the effective enforcement of disabled people’s rights. Changes are recommended to combat these developments, including the collection of data relating to disability discrimination claims and reviewing the fee structure for tribunal claims for disability discrimination. It also recommends that the government amend the mandates of those regulators, inspectorates and Ombudsmen that deal with services most often accessed by disabled people to make the securing of compliance with the Equality Act 2010 a specific statutory duty.

The government is expected to respond to the Lords report within two months of the date of the report.

Local Government Ombudsman: disabled facilities grant problems

The Local Government Ombudsman published a report on 21 March 2016 called “Making a house a home: local authorities and disabled adaptations” which stated that people with disabilities were being left too long in unsuitable homes because of problems with councils’ Disabled Facilities Grant (DFG) processes.

The report details that in 2015, Leonard Cheshire Disability found that every year almost 2,500 disabled people wait longer than they should to receive their DFG. The charity’s research found that 62% of councils surveyed were not funding agreed adaptations within set timescales. It further set out research from Foundations which oversees the national network of Home Improvement Agencies which found that older people were able to stay in their own homes and postpone moving into a care home by an average of four years following adaptations. The Foundations research suggested that the average cost of a placement in residential care is around £29,000 per year whereas the average cost of providing adaptation is less than £7,000 (although the editors note that making adaptations does not rule out the need for further in-home support).

The report sets out common issues and complaints by means of individuals complaints to the LGO: delay in making a referral, failure to complete an OT assessment and make clear recommendations; failure to consult other professionals; delay in provision of disabled adaptations etc and provides a useful summary of the DFG process in Appendix 1.

Guidance for social workers working with people with an ABI

The aim of the guide is to increase awareness of ABI among social workers and to provide guidance about what an ABI is and how intervention by social workers can benefit individuals. It also contains useful information for COP practitioners who may have clients with an ABI. The guidance contains an interesting case study at appendix 1 which raises issues around a potential, previously undiagnosed ABI.

ATU Days of Action

Beginning on Monday 18 April there will be seven days of action intended “to raise awareness of the thousands of learning disabled people currently being held against their wishes in assessment and treatment units.” See here for more details.

The site also contains statistics about young people resident in ATUs (taken from the Learning Disability Census 2015). See here.

Money and mental health: new institute and survey

A new Money and Mental Policy Institute has been set up, and is running a major survey to gather stories and information from people who’ve experienced mental illness or mental distress about their finances. More details can be found here.

Children and life-limiting illnesses

In County Durham & Darlington NHS Foundation Trust v SS & Ors [2016] EWHC 535 (Fam), the court was concerned with a profoundly disabled 7 year old girl who was in the care of the local authority, and who was thought to be on a downward trajectory in view of her many serious physical and neurological disabilities. The relevant NHS Trust sought declarations that it was lawful for their clinicians to treat SS in accordance with their clinical discretion, effectively to impose a ceiling of care such that resuscitation and admission to intensive care would be most unlikely to be offered. The child’s guardian supported the Trust’s application; SS’s parents opposed it. Granting the declarations sought, Cobb J commented on and approved the usefulness of the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health guidance “Making decisions to limit treatment in life-limiting and life-threatening conditions in children: a framework for practice” (2015).
Short note: Strasbourg, deprivation of liberty and children

In Blokkin v Russia [2016] ECHR 300, the Grand Chamber of the ECtHR has decided that Russia breached Article 3 of the ECHR when it detained a 12 year old boy with disabilities for 30 days in a temporary detention centre for juvenile offenders. The applicant complained that he had not received adequate medical care while in the temporary detention centre for juvenile offenders and that the conditions of his detention there had been inhuman. The Grand Chamber concluded that “there has been a violation of the applicant’s rights under Article 3 on account of the lack of necessary medical treatment at the temporary detention centre for juvenile offenders, having regard to his young age and particularly vulnerable situation, suffering as he was from ADHD”.

Further, the Grand Chamber confirmed the earlier Chamber decision (which the Russian Government did not contest) that “the applicant’s placement for thirty days in the temporary detention centre amounted to a deprivation of liberty within the meaning of Article 5 § 1, noting in particular that the centre was closed and guarded, with twenty-four-hour surveillance of inmates to ensure that they did not leave the premises without authorisation, and with a disciplinary regime enforced by a duty squad.” It held that that there had been a violation of Article 5(1) of the ECHR as his placement in the centre could not be justified under Article 5(1)(d) as “detention of a minor by lawful order for the purpose of educational supervision”, as it had not served an educational purpose. The Russian courts on deciding on his placement referred to behaviour correction and the need to prevent the boy from committing further delinquent acts, neither of which constituted ‘educational supervision’.

The court held that there had been a violation of the boy’s Article 6 rights. The proceedings which had led to the boy being placed in the detention centre should have been considered criminal proceedings for the purpose of Article 6 despite the fact that they were not classified as criminal under Russian law. A majority of the court held that the child’s defence rights had been violated because he had been questioned by the police without legal assistance and the statements of two witnesses whom he was unable to question had served as the basis for his placement in the detention centre.

The UK based charity, the Mental Disability Advocacy Centre (MDAC) was granted permission to intervene in the case. The editors note that the intervention held weight with the judges of the Grand Chamber. The judgment quotes the submissions made by MDAC and adopts some key aspects of the submissions.
