APPOINTMENTS

Academic Practice

Since 2003 The University of Manchester – Senior Lecturer

With research interests in mental health, incapacity, human rights, administrative and criminal law, Neil regularly publishes and teaches at undergraduate and postgraduate level, and lectures to psychiatric, social welfare, and legal professionals.

Having assisted the Legal Advice Centre since 2001, he was appointed as its Deputy Director in 2006 and established a dementia law clinic in 2014. His responsibilities include the supervising of students in their provision of legal advice to members of the public, covering a diverse range of legal issues including mental health, employment, and landlord and tenant matters. Occasionally he has advised on criminal appeals, one of which led to R. v Partington [2008] E.W.C.A. Crim. 2536, and on references to the Criminal Cases Review Commission and European Court of Human Rights.

Mental Health and Social Care Training

Mental Health Act 1983 courses

Since 2006, Neil has trained consultant psychiatrists and general practitioners in the North West and North Wales and co-ordinated the section 12 courses on behalf of the National Health Service. He has also taught on the Approved Clinician courses in London, York, Nottingham and Manchester for the Royal College of Psychiatrists. In addition, the University's School of Psychological Medicine and local authorities regularly invite him to train their social workers and approved mental health professionals on all aspects of the 1983 Act.

Deprivation of Liberty Safeguards courses

He is involved in the training of best interests assessors and mental health assessors across England and Wales and he has delivered lectures on the subject for the Royal College of Psychiatrists, the Department of Health and the Welsh Assembly Government.

Mental Capacity Act 2005 courses

The Department of Health, many local authorities, health authorities, interest groups, other University departments, charities and international pharmaceutical companies invite Neil to train professionals or lecture on the subject.
