"She is a very strategic thinker, has exceptional in depth knowledge of her field with a very good client manner." The Legal 500 2022

Qualified in England and Wales and Republic of Ireland, Katherine's practice spans public and human rights law, disciplinary/ regulatory, EU, employment and commercial law. She has particular expertise in appellate advocacy and in domestic and international equality law. Katherine's cases are often at the cutting edge of the intersection between public and private law.

Katherine is described in directories as "the right person to go to with a difficult and novel point of law"(The Legal 500); "outstanding, confident, direct and eminently approachable"(The Legal 500) who "can think through cutting-edge issues of law in an impressive way"(The Legal 500); "very much in control of a complex brief"(Chambers and Partners) with "expertise that is so wide-ranging"(Chambers and Partners); "Professional, cooperative, experienced, and personally very kind"(Chambers and Partners).

Katherine works for a wide range of clients: from government departments, HMRC and local authorities to trade unions; individuals to multinational companies, insolvency professionals and receivers. She is a graduate of Harvard Law School's LL.M programme and former stagiaire at the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Katherine was shortlisted for Public Law Junior of the Year at The Legal 500 UK Bar Awards 2019 and 2022.

-- EU Law

Katherine is qualified and called to the Bar both in England and Wales and the Republic of Ireland (within the EU). Katherine has extensive experience of acting in cases involving EU law and appearing in the CJEU.

Katherine also regularly acts in cases post-Brexit which deal with questions of interpretation of the European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018 and the European Union (Future Relationship) Act 2020. Katherine frequently advises on and acts in cases concerning retained EU law, relevant separation agreement law, relevance of free trade agreements and other international treaties, general principles of EU law and intersection with the Human Rights Act 1998.

Her areas of expertise span:

- EU treaty competences
- Free movement
- Fundamental rights
- Company law and cross border mergers
- Social security
- Employment protections
- Equalities
- State aid and competition
- Procurement
- Trade unions
- Cross border insolvency

- External relations

Cases of note:

- C 928/19 P and T-310/18 European Federation of Public Service Unions (EPSU) v European Commission - Action for annulment brought by a European public service union against the European Commission for refusing to propose a framework agreement on information and consultation of public service workers to the council for a decision. The challenge was the first under the Treaty of Lisbon concerning the status of the Chapter on Social Partners and institutional balance of the legislative procedures. The General Court confirmed the amenability to challenge of a decision to refuse to propose to the council and CJEU confirmed the special status of social partners agreements as capable of creating legal rights and obligations once adopted into a directive.
