John Steel QC's main areas of practice are planning, aviation, compulsory purchase and environmental law and he is cited as a recommended leader in these fields by the current editions of Chambers UK and The Legal 500. He is an expert in environmental, licensing, local government and related cases. His planning and environmental law practice has encompassed the full range of developments, including major infrastructure, housing, retail, business, leisure, minerals and waste. John is Joint Head of the Planning, Environment and Property Group in 39 Essex Chambers.

Victoria Hutton is a planning and environmental law barrister at 39 Essex Chambers. She has consistently been rated as one of the top planning barristers under 35 by Planning Magazine (2016, 2015, 2014). Her work spans the breadth of planning and environmental law and she regularly appears in courts of all levels and at planning appeals. Her current work includes acting on behalf of a developer in their appeal against the refusal of planning permission for a crematorium in the green belt, promoting sites on behalf of various landowners through the local plans process and appearing on behalf of the proposed developer at a number of appeals following the refusal of planning permission for retail use. Victoria is also currently co-authoring a textbook on planning policy which is due to be published by Bloomsbury in 2017.
